To whom it may concern,

What are you people thinking? The whole reason for this lawsuit was monopolistic practices by Microsoft.

By allowing the company to continue to bundle other software into windows, and making those rpograms an integral part of said Windows, the consumer is now being allowed to have the choices he or she so deserves.

I guess it doesn't matter to the gonernment that we have elected that we, as Americans, like to have many choices. With Microsoft making Outlook Express, Windows Media Player and Internet Explorer integral to Windows, we have been stymied in our choices.

It is becoming more difficult to remove these applications, if not impossible without crashing Windows, and and use something else. I think Ashcroft and the rest of the DOJ need to gain some backbone and make Microsoft ease up on their monopolistic practices, make Windows internal working available to the software developers for better integration and to stop bundling IE, OE and WMP into windows.

I thought the government was supposed to be "for the people, by the people, and of the people" not "for the company, by the comapny and of the company".
